UK Outlook for Tuesday 15 Jun 2021 to Thursday 24 Jun 2021:
High pressure across the majority of the UK looks set to bring a lot of dry and settled weather at first with widely above average temperatures in the south, and nearer average temperatures in the north. However, further cloud and outbreaks of rain quickly arriving into the far west and northwest, associated with another spell of warmer air, will sweep south-east. This will introduce cooler and more showery conditions countrywide during the latter part of next week. There is a chance of a spell of very hot conditions, with thundery rain, arriving across the south mid-week, especially south-east, before the cooler conditions arrive. Temperatures likely returning to near average by the end of the period.
